Sunny and the Platypus

Sonny's Cozy Quokka Bedtime Tales — Book 7

WRITTEN BY JAMIE WIGG

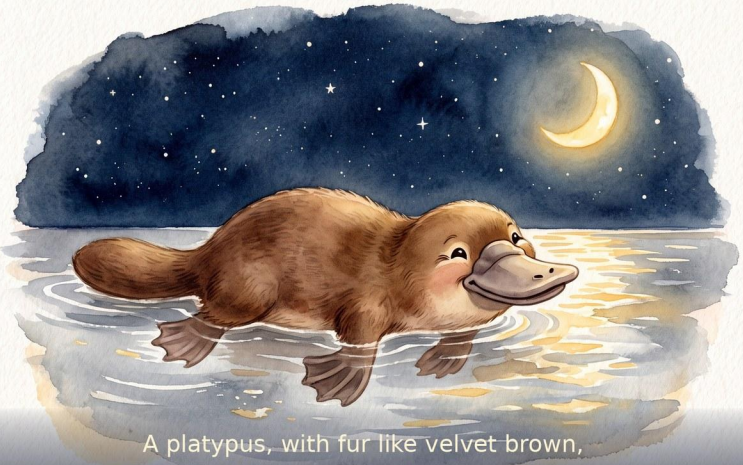

Sunny found a creek beneath the silver moon,
its water still and smooth as polished glass.

A ring appeared, and then another ring —
something moving softly through the stream.

A platypus, with fur like velvet brown,
a duck-like bill and webbed and paddling feet.

An illustration of two kangaroos sitting on opposite banks of a small creek at night. The kangaroos are brown with white chests and bellies, looking towards the water. In the water, a platypus is swimming, leaving ripples. The background is a dark night sky with a crescent moon and stars. The scene is framed by a dark, irregular border.

It glided slow across the silver creek, leaving gentle ripples in its wake.

"Hello," said Sunny. "What a lovely swim."
"The water's warm and quiet now," it said.

It dived beneath with barely any splash,
and came back up with whiskers dripping bright.

It floated on its back to watch the stars,
paws upon its round and fluffy tummy.

They watched the moon float on the water's face,
two moons now — one above and one below.

Sunny found a nest of reeds nearby and curled up warm beside the whispering creek.

The water murmured soft its lullaby,
Everything was gentle, calm, and safe.

Her eyes grew heavy as the ripples slowed.
One slow blink... then another... then no more.

And Sunny slept beside the sleeping stream, rocked by dreams as soft as flowing water.

Goodnight, Sunny. Goodnight, little platypus.
Goodnight, sleepy creek. Goodnight, little one.
